LESTRUCTIVE STORM

The Wnd One Pandred Twenty-five Miles an Hour.

Large Amount of Damage Done.

NORFOLK, Va., Aug. 23. The signal service sea coast telegraph line was repaired yesterday and information has been obtained showing that the storm which prevailed along the North Carolina coast Sunday leaves ast Sunday last was one of the most structive that has visited that section for years. At Kitty Hawk the force of the storm blew away the apparatus for measuring the velocity of the wind at the signal station and the observer reports that the fury of the storm was almost indescribable. He estimates the velocity of the wind a: his station at about 125 miles an hour and states that the damage to shipping id that vicinity must be unusual-ly heavy. The telegraph line south of Kitty Hawa is entirely wrecked; the poles were torn out of the earth and broken into matchwood.

Damage to Shipping

Damage to Shipping:
Among the vessels known to have been damaged by the storm were the following: American barkentine Waiter S. Meesey, sprung a leak off Chacamocomico, N. C.; the Baker Salvage! Compeny has been notified and a steamer has been dispatched to the relief of the vessel.

The steamer Eaglet, of the North Carolina Despatch Co., is reported ashore on Cove Sound, high and dry, and tug Wm. F. Taylor, of Norfolk, and steamer Amle, of the North Carolina Despatch Co., are reported ashore near Cherry Point, eighteen miles below Newbern, N. C. It is thought that other and perhaps more serious shipping casualties will be reported when telegraphic communication with Hatteras has been restored.

One archivet claims for an eight-inch wall, properly liusd, with paper, a greater resistance to the cold of winder near the heat of summer than is usually obtained from a wall built six een inches in the bid method.

Another speaker, in prophesying the future developement of such a material as paper, remarks that we class a great variety of suitstances under the general name of paper, but his main keas is a flexible sheet made of vegetable or other fiber, which has been reduced to a full and then spread out and pressed and dried. Its most obvious qualities are:

1. Continuity of surface. It can be made in rolls of almost any width and length. It is flexible or by gluing several hyers together may be made stiff. It will stop the passage of his because there are no joints.

2. It has no grain like wood, and will

The commercial success of the paper cottage will depend upon the discovery of some very cheap material for the pulp, and also a cheap process for compacting the same and rendering it waterproof.

Paper may be used for the deadening of floors. The cuiling up of matched flooring when applied to wet mortar has its disadvantages, and when buildings must be finished in a hurry the passage of sound may be stopped by paper, perhaps combined with mineral wool, without introducing moisture into a building already too damp. Arch teets, in the attempt to stop the passage of sound through floor and partitions, try mortar and plaster, sand, ashes, and concrete between joints and on the top of them, paper and felt, mineral wool, air spaces, etc.; but who en tell how to stop the most sound for the least money? Another architect suggests that something may be built in the following manner: The frames of the houses to be of word, the siding to be of build ng paper hid to break joints and weather, he lower edges to be ent into scallojs, waving lines or other shapes to suit. Around the openings the paper to fasten into rabbits and the joints to be made tight. The roof is to be made much the same May, leaving the effect of tiles, shingles, or whatever the designer may chroke. Outters, exterior architaves, or other parte, may be stamped or inclided in paper-mache, some for ornament and details around porches, bay-windows, or to ornament exterior features. The entire exterior may be either finished with spar-varnish or other paint, to make the same impervious to weather and to decorate at the same time. The interior features, even the walls and callings of a house, to be much the same as the outside and decorated at the same time.

The floors thas may be made of stiff pasteboard where carepts are used, and it is possible even to leavelthem bare from the preparation hard enough to preserve them from the above may be done now, and probably at a saving over the usual methods.

Paper is practicable for all parts of a house except the constructional details. A house thas bulk can be erected quicker, cheaper and in a more cleanly manner and more verifier to live in, overaconat of the above may be done now, and artists and architects are obtaining some fine resouts.

When paper shall cound into general use them. When paper shall cound into general use them.

when paper shall cound integeneral use there will be no riore shrinkings, no more abuse of architects for bad work, of the chinies in the way of imperfect joints. There will be no more ugly nell hoies or the usual wood annoyances. There will be no more patching or deafening or trouble arising from the wet floor and walls.

3. It is not affected by change of temperature and hence has an advantage over sheet metal as roofing material.

4. Whereas in is natura condition it is affected by moisture, it may be rendered waterproof by saturating with asphalt or by a variety of other treatments.

5. It is non-resonant and well-fitted to prevent the passage of sound.

6. It is a non-conductor of heat.

7. It can be made of incombustible material, link absestos, or rendered fire-resisting by chemical treatment.

We can therefore produce large sheets, there flexible or stiff, that will not conduct sound, heat or cold, and that will prevent the passage of air, moisture and fire.

By combining paper with other substances and solidifying the mass by pressure we may produce a mater al that will replace wood for many purposes, and the case with which it may be made into sheets of any-width and thickness that will not warp or shrink from heat of cold or dumpness indicates the superiority of this material.

shine. Personally I learned this as others must learn it, and it may be the brief details may interest and profit those who read this letter. About they years ago I had a severe caturrhal affection. The droppings from my head during the night found their way to the stomach, and the sorid accumulation at last produced estarrhal poisening of the blood, which disturbed the functions of the stomach and brought on dyspepala. I first discovered that something was wrong by a distress at the pit of the stomach and a tendency to vomit after cating, with a sense of heat in the region of the stomach. This sensation of heat increased during the night, when there would be a rising of acid matter into the threat and amount, leaving a turning and smarting feeling in the threat and a continual and posular sour lasts in the mouth. Of course I put myself under medical treatment and followed my physician's instructions faithfully. My appoilte was very-sittol and I goe to had that I could est nothing sweet, while pastry especially would increase all the unpleasant symptoms. As then went on I became unterly unable to take any starchy food, as it would be continually coming up into the mouth, leaving a bitter and acrit ing up into the mouth, leaving a bitter and scrid aste. It would also produce a sense of weight and taste. It would also procinos a cease of weight and pressure, with twinging pains in the region of the stomach, with palpitation of the heart. There were also dysapplic disturbances affecting the nerves of the stomach, with severe cramps and aching pains in the region of that organ and a very disagrecable sensation when the stomach was empty. This was felt chiefly between meals and would subside after I had caken something. I had caten something.

This was neuralgic dyspepsia or gustralgia. 1

This was nearalgic dyspenda or gastralgia. I was now greatly run down; my reat was broken so that I rarely or never enjoyed a good night's steep. The effect of this on my spirits and general health I need no more than mention. I was so weak and prostrated that I had to be carried up and down stairs. On the floor I could walk, but with difficulty and by reaking a tiresome effort. All this was while I was under constant medical treatment. I took soft and the various forms of pepsin by the pound. I often took from afteen to thirty grains of soda at meal times, and large quantities of sait dissolved in water between
